Excerpt: ... Towns.--Dornoch, the capital of Sutherland, the seat of a presbytery, and a small mean royal borough, containing 500 inhabitants, at the south-east extremity of the county, on the border of a frith of the same name, 9 miles north of Tain and 54-j from Inverness. The bishops palace lies in ruins, a part of the cathedral is the present church, but no vestige of the red friars minster can be traced. The frith of Dornoch is navigable for coasting vessels above 20 miles from the sea, and for 6mall boats near 20 miles farther towards Loch Broom. To the southward of the town, about 10 miles west of Tain, is the round tower of Dun-Alishaig, anciently a sumptuous edifice. No part of the wall is now above 14 feet high. A rude upright stone at Cariblair is inscribed with symbolical characters resembling mathematical figures and a fish. Criechy a mean place, situate on the north coast of the frith of Dornoch. Near the bottom of this frith, at Invershin, is a fine cataract of the river Shin already mentioned. The district of Rogart, northward of Dornoch, consists principally of Strathfiet and Strathbrora, two indifferently fruitful vallies, lying from west to east, five miles distant from each other. The interjacent space is a group of rocky hills, with moss partially intervening. Some spots on the acclivities of the hills are cultivated, but it is rare to see three yards of ground without a rock. Golspie is a mean village in a level and fertile tract, extending from the sea 10 miles inland. Dunrobin, an ancient seat of the Earls of Sutherland, was founded about A. D. 1100, on a round hill, near the sea coast. In its vicinity is a Pictish castle called Cairn Lia, or grey tower, 130 yards in circuit, and
