Not illustrated. 1914 Excerpt: ...by the Haneragmiut and occasionally by the Akuliakattagmiut is naunaitturut which literally, nellunait turut, we are easily seen, easily discerned from afar, but which I suppose denotes easy to see through, not given to underhand and secret practices, not treacherous, really as we appear. Treatment of Dogs. Their kindness to their dogs, a uniform trait I believe of all un-influenced Eskimo, is even greater than I have ever seen before. One of the dogs will every few minutes come and stand with his head in the doorway. He invariably gets a bone or piece of blubber. They can spare no meat now, but they do not clean-pick bones as western Eskimo do, and if someone tries to drive him off, another member of the family will protest You cannot expect a hungry dog not to beg for food, Drive him away with a bone and not a stick, etc. The dogs wear their harness all the time, and when they fight they are not beaten apart, as is the custom farther west, but pulled apart by the harness, which seems to be left on for this purpose. I saw one dog struck with a small stick, but he was an inveterate trouble breeder. Habits of Cleanliness. Measuring their heads, I saw neither lice nor nit, though this gave me a good chance to see any there were. I do not think them quite free, however, as I saw one or two women feeling for some such thing inside their coats. They were never successful in their search, which bad luck seldom attends a similar quest in the Mackenzie. They probably never wash but I know from experience one gets no dirtier after the first few days. Attitude toward being Measured and Photographed. They showed no fear of head measurements and of being photographed, at first. But B....
